Sir Thomas Lipton's case of good sportsmanship is incurable.

DO YOUR DUTY

Every good citizen who believes in a representative form of government will make use of his opportunity and privilege to take part in the affairs of his country by going to the polls and voting on Tuesday, August 3.

Those who stay away on the plea that they cannot afford to leave business long enough to go or who remain away through carelessness and indifference are committing a grave error. The voter who neglects his duty on election day should quietly submit to whatever follows and not be among those who are continually discussing the faults of the government and the mistakes of the politicians.

It will soon be time to be fitting the children's brown feet into black shoes again.

COLUMBIA AND COAL

With summer still with us, apprehension is already felt that if conditions do not improve, there will be a recurrence of the coal shortage of last year. The coal bins we have expected to fill up this summer are still empty. There are many reasons, of course. A prospect of transferring to another location, expectation of bargains, shipments of greater quantities of coal and other reasons have been, no doubt, responsible for the fact the winter coal is not stored.

Coal is being shipped to New England states and the Northwest and protests are made against this supposed monopoly of the fuel supply by these regions. All transportation facilities seem to be carrying the coal to these sections. The cities in the Middle West are now alarmed and full of apprehension at the manner in which coal is being handled. The conditions in the mining districts of the country are not as satisfactory as they should be.

The object of the present apprehension may not materialize but it is worth investigating. It may teach us yet to fill the empty bins before it is too late. This brings us to the realization of the importance of developing the coal mines near Columbia. These mines may not be able to supply the whole local demand, but they may be so developed as to safeguard in some way the city from a temporary crisis. Last year they helped during the coal shortage. It was stated then that they have rich veins. A greater enterprise may make them of real value to the city. The experience last year was too bad as to bear of repetition.

Few politicians in the country have put forth as much effort to gain the offices they seek as Sir Thomas Lipton did to win the races, but how many of them will be able to take their defeats as well as he.

A FAMILY BUDGET

How many families in Columbia keep a budget of their expense? In other words, how many families set aside certain amounts and say this and no more is to be spent for a certain thing and this is to be placed in the bank or go toward paying the indebtedness on the family home or the furniture?

The failure to follow this method leads to a great deal of worry about money matters which might well be avoided. If you know that a certain amount of your income is to be set aside to meet the needs of your household, you do it gladly and think no more about it.

Fat days and lean ones from the standpoint of expenditures in the home, come at different periods in the year and must be met. When the Christmas shopping time comes, it makes the family which spends its money carelessly feel poor indeed. If a certain amount is set aside for expenses, it will cover these holiday expenditures. It has been set aside for that purpose, so there is no reason for complaint.

It is necessary to keep an accurate household account for some time in order to be able to handle the budget system intelligently. In considering the apportionment of the money, the first thing to be thought of is the amount of the income and the necessary expenditures. These include food, shelter, clothing, upkeep of the house and other expenses such as education, recreation, churches and charity. Then comes the amount that is to be saved.

The extension division of the University publishes a booklet which may be bought for 10 cents which aids the keeping of accounts in the home. This is especially helpful to any housekeeper in taking care of her accounts. Every home should have a system of account keeping and a budget for family expenses.

Columbia Ranks Highest of Cities in Education

Columbia leads all cities of 10,000 population or more in the United States according to percentage of graduates from high school. A greater percentage of high school graduates enter and finish a college course than in any other city in the United States.

Columbia enrolls in her public schools a greater percentage of her population than any other city in the state. The percentage of attendance on enrollment is greater than any other city in the state. The same statement is true of the number of children finishing the elementary school course.

These statements were brought to light by a survey made recently by J. D. Eliff, of the School of Education.

Last year the school enumeration was 2,576 and of this number 2,229 were enrolled in the public schools, 135 in the University Elementary School, 35 in the parochial school and the remaining 177 were either in the University High School, the University, or the colleges.

Out of the 112 who finished the seventh grade in 1918, 109 entered high school. Out of the class entering high school four years ago, 98.99 per cent were graduated this year. For several years, at least 90 per cent of those graduated from high school have entered the University.

THE NEW BOOKS

A Book by Dr. Laws.

At the age of 94 years, Dr. Samuel S. Laws has published a volume upon "The At-One-ment by the Christian Trinity." The volume's title page is as follows:

"Lectures and Idealism."

How Kant set afoot a new thought by his conception of the Self and the Absolute and how these created a school of philosophers like Schelling and Hegel, who with Kant dominated German thought in the nineteenth century, is luminously explained in "Lectures on Modern Idealism", posthumous work of Josiah Royce, author of "The Spirit of Modern Philosophy". These lectures give a clear exposition of the nature of the thought out of which was evolved the German idea of conquest and Pan-Germanism. Written and delivered in 1906 at the John Hopkins University, these lectures are notable in that they have a true insight into the things which precipitated Germany into the late war. SCIENTIFIC BOARDING POPULAR

Meals Planned by Home Economic Students Are Successful.

An experiment that bids fair to revolutionize the kitchen of University students of co-operative households is on foot in Columbia. It originated at the request of a few students in the home economics department who recognized the value of experience in the management of such a household.

The plan is to place over a co-operative household a woman trained in the scientific principles of home economics. She would preferably be a student in the department doing advanced work, and should also be a member of the household. Her responsibility is both to the home economics department, from which she receives credit in proportion to her efficiency, and to the group whose interests she serves. Her position is that of a management specialist whose superior training enables her to manage a house more economically through the budget system she is required to use.

The scheme has been successfully carried out during the summer term in the Phi Mu house by Miss Eleen Russell. Miss Russell has, for the charge of $7 a week, succeeded in providing a menu, ample in quantity varied in kind attractive in service, agreeable to health, and moderate in cost.

Because it is in no way a money-making venture, the equipment of the kitchen and dining room profit by any surplus revenue that may accrue. In one case, a dish drier, dishes, a tea wagon and a gas stove have been purchased with the surplus.

The advantages of this plan claimed by its advocates are that a household has an economic head who is responsible for expenditures. Girls will not be tempted to economize on wholesome food at the expense of health. Food can be bought in larger quantities, and, therefore, more economically. The records kept and filed by each management specially will serve as a basis for others.
